The killing of Robert Kirotich, shooting of Elias Kimaiyo, and violent evictions of the Sengwer of Embobut

On April 2, 2017, Elias Kimaiyo was taking photographs of Kenya Forest Service (KFS) guards, documenting their activities as they burned the homes of his neighbors, indigenous Sengwer people in the Embobut Forest of Western Kenya. KFS guards spotted Kimaiyo and started chasing him and shooting. As he tried to run away through the steep Cherangany Hills, he fell and broke his kneecap. Catching up with him, one of the guards hit him with the butt of a rifle, breaking his right arm. When community members heard Elias calling out in agony they raised the alarm, shouting. The KFS guards ran away, taking Elias’ cameras and evidence.

The Kenya Forest Service and its parent Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources embrace an explicit strategy of forced eviction of forest communities, under the pretext of protecting the forest from deforestation. The Sengwer, however, are committed to conserving their lands and natural resources, and their rights to their forest homes are protected by law.

The KFS guards who shot at Elias were implementing a project called the Water Tower Protection and Climate Change Programme (WaTER), financed by the European Union’s European Development Fund (EDF) since 2016. The WaTER project aims to help eradicate poverty through improved ecosystem management in two of Kenya’s five main “water towers,” the forested mountainous regions from which Kenya’s water flows down to the rest of the country. The project goal is laudable, but implementation required proper protections to avoid fueling human rights abuses, as the experience of previous development finance projects made clear.

Between 2007 and 2013, after receiving US$57 million from the World Bank to carry out a Natural Resources Management Project, KFS guards engaged in a series of attacks on the Sengwer, arresting community members, burning their homes and destroying their property. An investigation by the World Bank’s independent accountability mechanism, the Inspection Panel, found that the Bank should have anticipated the risk of violent evictions given that eviction “was a main task of this Department of the KFS before, during, and after the conclusion of the [project].”
World Bank president Jim Yong Kim acknowledged the Bank’s responsibility and met with Kenyan President Kenyatta in late 2014, as he had promised in his response to the Inspection Panel’s report. In March 2015, the Bank, together with the Ministry of Environment, Water and Natural Resources, hosted a colloquium to bring forest communities and KFS together to try to find a solution, yet little progress was achieved. The EU was well aware of this history when it approved funding for WaTER. In late 2017, the violence by KFS escalated. On Christmas day, over 100 guards converged on the forest. On December 29th, they began burning homes, destroying families food stores and personal property, and stealing their livestock. KFS guards shot at community members, targeting elders and leaders who had spoken out. UN experts and Human rights groups around the world joined the Sengwer in condemning the attacks and called for the immediate suspension of EU funding.

The evictions continued. On January 9th, 2018, Paul Kitum Elias (aka Kiptuga), chairman of the Sengwer council at Embobut was preparing to attend a meeting with Kenyan and EU officials to discuss the crisis, when a KFS official called him on his cell phone to ascertain whether he was at his home. A few hours later, ten KFS guards arrived. As Kiptuga ran, the guards began shooting, reportedly shouting “Kill him, kill him, kill him!”

Then on January 16, 2018 while a group of Sengwer community members were tending their cattle, guards sprayed them with bullets. Robert Kirotich, 41-year old father of seven was killed, and David Kiptilkesi was shot through the knee. Another Sengwer man was injured. On 17th January 2018, EU officials finally announced the suspension of funding to the WaTER project.

“This is the beginning of a first step in our land rights struggles,” Elias reflected. “If they had listened to us (and we have been crying for a long time), then this would not have happened, and the funds could have been used in a constructive way to help conservation and not used in a violent way for human rights violations. It seems to have taken Robert Kirotich being sacrificed for these people to listen.”
Endnotes

1 Although Article 32 of the 2016 Forest Conservation and Management Act states that “All community forests shall be vested in the community, subject to any rights of user in respect thereof, which by or under this Act or other written law, have been or are granted to any other person”, the 3rd schedule annexed to the Act lists all Forest Dwellers’ forests as ‘gazetted public forests’ which KFS has the mandate to control and exclude all forest dwellers from. However this is clearly counter to the Constitution, especially Article 63.2.d.ii, and forest dwellers are hoping to challenge this in court.

9 The EU participated in the World Bank colloquium in 2015, and were fully aware of the issues and the impacts of the NRMP. For example, Hojordis Ogendo, Head of Social Affairs and Environment at that time (and still at the EU Delegation in Nairobi) was engaged in email exchanges and meetings on the issues and provided with relevant briefings on the matter by both Forest Peoples Programme and Katiba Institute.

11 Kiptuga, 16th January 2018, Proof of Evidence, taken by Tom Lomax and Justin Kenrick, FPP, at Kitale, paragraph 28, on file with Forest Peoples Programme.